From the Desk of Rabbi Bruce Benson

As Grandma used to say "Goodbye and good riddance". 2020 was a year that deserved to be relegated to the past tense in a very omnipresent way. So many challenges in so many directions. So much to discern as we look to the future.

Among the many roads to be taken is the road that combines our past with our future. Do we move forward with energy to protect what we hold dear or does Enthusiasthma take us by the hand down a dark road?

As we enter into the book of Exodus this month, we are challenged by God and circumstance to choose our road: do we follow Moshe rabbeynu out of Egypt and the demeaning emotional slavery that accompanied our almost 5 centuries there or do we choose to stay where it is most safe avoiding anything that requires us to reimagine what is, and has always been, what is most dear, most defining.

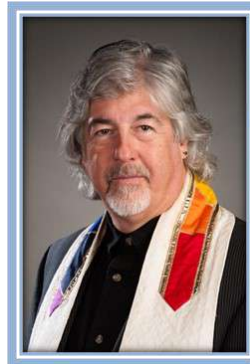

Not all our ancestors chose to leave with Moses on his journey to a new and unknown land taking an unknown road with its many turns and twists. Many chose to take the easy way hoping things would get better if they just kept out of the way.

With a little math, we see that Moses was just around 80 when the journey began-when he stood at the mountain top and looked over the Promised land, he was 120. Even then, he spoke to his people of securing a future for generations to follow. He was not destined to cross over the river and enter the land.

He was, however, the great leader by speaking of a future with challenges and eventual success and security.

Over the next few months, each of us will be called to lead the way for future generations to cleave too, to cling to a faith community we have believed in and joined with all our lives. What will it be?

A Happy & Healthy New Year to everyone in our Temple family.

As I have repeatedly said, we are all anxious to get back to a normal existence and that includes our Temple life.

We are so close to seeing a solution to this pandemic and to being able to be vaccinated that we all just have to be patient and understand and recognize our vulnerability and that we will be together, sooner rather than later. Our patience will pay off in the end because we will all be together again.

We are planning another outdoor service (weather permitting) on Friday night, January 15th at 7 p.m. Let's all try to support our efforts to be together and encourage our non-member friends to attend and see just what we have to offer.

Putting together an outdoor service is not an easy job and I want to applaud Les Schwartz, Richard Levine and Rabbi Benson for setting up and breaking down all the equipment involved. Thank you for all you do....

We're in this together, let's stay healthy and safe together.

Did we believe it was true and good for me, or shared with pride for all to see - I am a Jew-through it all, my pride will not hide, I will continue the walk to the promised land, I will be part of securing a future of strength and promise for the Jewish community of Port St. Lucie. Belief sometimes is challenging - Faith even more so. Don't just rest in the past. Be part of the future. Help us ensure that the road will still be travelled by sojourners determined to stay the course. Moses walked from 80 to 120 to stay the course. Will generations to come see that we did the same?

It has been the oddest of years- but from challenge, raises strength. Let us be strong - ביחד B'yachad! Together we are strong. Let us head into the New year resolute, strong and sure. I look forward to the journey. I hope you'll join me as well.

With hopes for a wonderful New Year filled with the answers to so many prayers we have, for ourselves and for the Jewish community of Port St. Lucie.

Our Monthly TBEI Library Book Review.....by Sheilah Korinow

How many of you remember a specific sermon delivered by one of your rabbis during your lifetime? Probably many of you, myself included. Why is that? Is it because that sermon did one or more of the following:

- It provided you with a tremendous amount of information on a topic you enjoyed.
- It made you feel good about yourself.
- It made you feel good about humanity.
- It made you feel good about God.
- It made you feel uncomfortable.
- It made you feel a "call to action", to make yourself better or to repair the world?
- It gave you better insights which helped you continue to think about things on a deeper level?

I know there are more reasons why we remember sermons - that is a sermon in and of itself! But in this book which I am reviewing, Loving What Is Close by Rabbi Herbert M. Baumgard, you will find a number of different sermons and talks delivered in various surroundings such as synagogues, churches, and public assemblies. Rabbi Baumgard was the founding and senior rabbi of Temple Beth Am in South Miami, and a graduate of Hebrew Union College.

The book is set up into five sections, each one containing between 4-7 talks. The date of the book is 1980, but they are spread out back into the 1960's. Many ideas in them are still relevant, and as twentieth century Jews, we can add our own ideas, based on the passage of time.

Now let's look at what gems this book holds.

The first section deals with "Morals for Our Time." Some things you'll find in this section are sermons which include:

- a discussion about the creation of the atomic bomb and Dr. J Robert Oppenheimer. "Are human beings going to be lost in the struggle for bigger bombs? Has the manufacture of the bigger bomb made the individual citizens of the world happier, or have they become even more afraid, even more melancholy, more desperate?" Will we, after seeking more power, destroy ourselves? In this sermon is the topic of overreaching. There is a discussion of the lure of affluence, which encourages us to reach farther than we should. The story of the Tower of Babel is used in this talk.

- The attitude of Jews towards violence. We see in the Talmudic teaching: "He who takes one human life is as if he has destroyed the whole world." Rabbi Baumgard discusses the "turning of the cheek" attitude we had during parts of the sixth, seventh, and eighth centuries. He denounces the militarism of modern Israel; He mentions vengeance in our history and our absorption into the current violent culture as much as non-Jews.

Another sermon in this section, "Marriage, American Style" has topics that run the gamut from one telling about Woody Allen being a tragic symbol of our times, the stampede towards the divorce courts, finally questioning whether or not marriage can succeed. Other talks include:

- a discussion about Albert Einstein
- a choice of lifestyles. The sermon states: "America is desperately in need of help from its people, but the people are preoccupied with asking for more for themselves. Rabbi Baumgard talks about the differences between the older and younger generations and offers a Biblical story to do so. Also included is a discussion of learning and what we teach our children - we teach them to receive and to take, not how to give and share. To the author, this leads to a problem with marriage (if we are taught only to receive).

"The Rabbi in The Community" is the second section of the book. It contains the following

- black-Jewish relations
- a visit to a Black church
- a challenge to a cross on one of the courthouses in Miami, and a discussion about what religious freedom is
- what we can learn from the battle at Kent State
- anti-Semitism, using the Jews as a scapegoat
- Vietnam - Does the end justify the means?

Section Three is called "On the Bible And Modern Times". In it, we read about:

- the tradition that even the ruler of the nation, the President, must abide by the laws governing all other citizens. Doesn't this make a timely read? This sermon was delivered in 1974!

- What is the purpose of certain stories in the Bible? Includes why was the world created, why was Eve taken from Adam's rib, and why is there a book such as Song of Songs in the Bible?

- Is flight the answer? A discussion about Jonah

- Giving old events present meaning. This sermon shares with us stories from the Bible, the Midrash, the Talmud, and Hasidic tales.

The fourth section is called "On Jews And Judaism". It concerns the following:

- Entebbe, followed by a discussion about other miracles. What constitutes a miracle? Finding God in a philosophic or mystic way.

- the mystical requirements for being a Jew. The emotional side of our religion.

- Why does God sometimes seem so far away? Is He far enough away to be challenging, yet near enough to be watchful?

- learning the art of prayer - the difficulties expressing ourselves to God, the need to search for God and to work with Him, and to be able to verbalize what we feel.

Finally, we arrive at the last section. "New Vistas". This contains ideas about:

- What is a "good" Jew?

- What is ahead for the Jewish People?

- "The enemy within" - assimilation. Also, you are the enemy within due to "your ignorance and your lukewarm attachment to the Jewish People." Do you have the courage to face the enemy? (If your answer is yes, then no eternal enemy can defeat us).

- What will be the religion of the future?

- Should Jews be missionaries?

Obviously, these sermons need to be read to enjoy the specifics of what I have touched upon. I can only give you an overview of what to expect, and to point you in the right direction. I have supplied you with a few specifics. But time and space does not allow me to provide you with anymore. Otherwise, why would you want to check out this book? Please know that after reading Loving What Is Close, you will be impressed with the amount of worthwhile thinking you have accomplished!

As with other books I have reviewed since April, I will be glad to meet you outside of the temple or deliver them to you. Just email me at skorinow@gmail.com.

At a recent adult ed class, Ellis Bromberg gave a very interesting presentation about stamp collecting – the theme was Chanukah stamps – Ellis showed us stamps from his collection from around the world, and stamps from countries that you would never have expected to honor Chanukah with a stamp, were displayed. This is an article that Ellis published about stamps displaying synagogues around the world:

BACKGROUND

Following the horrors of the Holocaust, the Jews who survived and decided to stay in eastern Europe hoped to rebuild their communities and institutions devastated by the war. But they would soon find that life for Jews living behind the Iron Curtain would be harsh. Ruth E. Gruber, the Jewish Telegraphic Agency's longtime senior European correspondent, has written, "Under Communism, Jewish life was stifled, anti-Semitism was often state policy and study or discussion of Jewish topics was taboo. Most Communist states broke relations with Israel after the Six-Day War in 1967."

In the Soviet Union itself, during the years of the Cold War, Soviet Jews were suspected of being traitors, Western sympathizers, and security liabilities. The Communist leadership closed down Jewish organizations and declared Zionism an ideological enemy. Synagogues were often placed under police surveillance, both openly and through the use of informers. These hardships sparked the movement in America, beginning in the 1960s, to free Soviet Jewry.

CONDITION CHANGES

Although circumstances vary from country to country, official government treatment of Jewish communities in many former

Iron Curtain nations has improved since the fall of Communism. While acknowledging that some activities have been "examples of lip service, cynicism, and exploitative image-polishing," Gruber nevertheless reports: "The new post-Communist governments quickly moved to re-establish diplomatic relations with Israel, encourage Jewish study and open discussion of the Holocaust, including an examination of local involvement. In all these countries, much of this activity has represented a sincere attempt to make amends and come to terms with the past."

One manifestation of these new policies can be seen in the postage stamps issued by these former Soviet and Soviet-controlled states. Many of these nations, for example, have acknowledged the Holocaust on stamps; some have partnered with Israel on joint issues.

SYNAGOGUE ISSUES

As a collector of synagogues on stamps, I've noted a trend, in particular, in the number of synagogues that have been depicted on the stamps of these countries since 1989, the year the Berlin Wall fell. Before then, only two Soviet bloc countries, Czechoslovakia and Poland, had ever devoted a full stamp to a synagogue: Prague's Altneuschul was shown on a 1967 Czech stamp, and the Tykocin Synagogue on a 1984 Polish stamp. But since 1989, no fewer than 10 other former Soviet states and allies have issued such stamps.
